IHHG is a platform for Indigenous and non-Indigenous community leaders, scholars, researchers, educators, and advocates to come together and engage in meaningful dialogue, exchange ideas, and contribute to the preservation, understanding, and appreciation of Indigenous history and heritage.

Similarly, professionals working with Indigenous communities including representatives of municipal, provincial, and federal government agencies, museum professionals, historians, language experts, legal teams, and scholars with a residential school focus will see practical examples of successful contemporary history and heritage projects in Indigenous communities and have the opportunity to learn from Indigenous heritage and cultural professionals.
